Databases and directories The catalog contains dictionary entries, on the basis of which databases are created. When searching, you can use the properties of the dictionary itself, sorting, tree-like lists, etc.Database Structure Records The main component of a database is a table that corresponds to one or more rows and is labeled in the table with a field name. If the field name is missing, the search is performed on the name of only the table in which it is marked. The database can also use long names, which are specified after the column name, and complex relationships between them. The depth of file storage can be different, from a few seconds to several years. It all depends on the type of data used in the database and the viewport.
