Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a solid-state imaging device used in a video camera and the like. 2. Description of the Related Art There has been a solid-state imaging device of the type wherein a plurality of photosensors arrayed on a semiconductor substrate are arrayed in two lines with one line being the horizontal scanning line, to thereby form one pixel. With this type of solid-state imaging device, it is known to perform white balance adjustment for color-balance adjustment of a video signal by irradiating white light on a light receiving surface of the solid-state imaging device, the reflected light of which is read out by each of the respective photosensors, and reading out the quantity of received light. The photosensor in the solid-state imaging device used as the above white-balance adjustment device is provided with a photodiode region and a read-out circuit region. Normally, an N-type semiconductor region is provided in the photodiode region. It is known that the sensitivity of the solid-state imaging device can be maximized by setting the concentration of the N-type semiconductor region in the photodiode region equal to the concentration of the N-type semiconductor region in the read-out circuit region. However, if a PN junction is formed by ion implantation to 09e8f5149f
