It aims to be the best penetration testing operating system on the market. It is based on an enhanced version of the Debian GNU/Linux distribution, with a Debian GNU/Linux based kernel with additional security measures, improved system performance and easy of maintenance. BackTrack5 (Short for BackTrack in HardBoiled) is designed to be a useful tool for security enthusiasts, system administrators and penetration testers, with a focus on penetration testing, exploitation, auditing and security auditing. It is often used in security-focused conferences and other gatherings of people interested in security issues. The project started as an on-line testbed for security researchers, and it is frequently used by students, researchers and hackers at hacker conferences such as DEF CON, CanSecWest, ShmooCon, SecTor, and Security B-Sides. It also has support for the ISO-9001 QA/Security. The original version of BackTrack had several bugs and serious limitations, although it was a good software tool. Its source code was included in the installation CD as a source of interest to hackers, security enthusiasts and penetration testers. In March 2010, a new version of BackTrack was released, with much improved security and a much more thorough set of built-in tools. DoD 71820A allows the user to control, view, and analyze digital records from the Public Key Infrastructure (PKI) in a secure and anonymous manner. It allows secure digital mail, document, and data-over-IP transport. DoD 71820A uses Public Key Infrastructure to build and use digital certificates and public key infrastructure tokens. It supports the entire PKI path: digital certificates, digital identity cards, public key tokens, and access certificates. It uses a secure and distributed PKI infrastructure that allows communication between users, and the world at large, in an encrypted and authenticated manner. DoD 71820A 1d6a3396d6
