The effects of lipopolysaccharide (LPS) on production of cytokines by thymic stromal cells were studied by an in vitro culture assay and by enzyme-linked immunoassay. Interleukin-1 (IL-1) production by thymic stromal cells was strongly induced by LPS. The effects of LPS on IL-1 production by thymic stromal cells were dose-dependent. The thymus of mice given LPS containing adjuvant was depleted of IL-1. When LPS was added to the culture medium, IL-1 production by thymic stromal cells was stimulated 2.4-fold. Treatment with indomethacin abrogated the effect of LPS on IL-1 production by thymic stromal cells. In the culture supernatants of thymic stromal cells with mitogen or staphylococcal toxoid, IL-1 activity was increased by the treatment with LPS. Treatment of mice with a combination of LPS and IL-1 resulted in disappearance of a greater number of thymocytes. On the basis of these findings, it is concluded that LPS enhances production of IL-1 by thymic stromal cells, leading to the decrease of thymocytes.
